

Editorial Note

This issue will always hold a special position in the hearts of all individuals associated with Truth and Youth. It is really overwhelming to see the immense amount of hard work that the team as well as the contributing authors have put in for the successful release of the issue. The dreams that follow are even larger and it is the zeal in these young students that keeps me engaged with them all through the course of the activities taken up by them.

Recalling the first day that the team members had begun ideating the release of the issue, I remember the great deal of confusion and insecurities in their minds. The thought of the journal being in its nascent stage always kept them on the edge but their perseverance surpassed their diffidence.

Being closely connected to a number of students pursuing law, provides me with the opportunity to expose myself to their ideas and it awes me to see the efforts put in by all budding legal professionals in general. I wholeheartedly wish, success comes chasing them in this field and they propagate lawful inspiration on all citizens of the nation.

- Aastha Chadha,
Advocate, High Court of Delhi

It was pleasing to see the quality of submissions received for this issue. I appreciate the young budding law students working hard to harness their skills.”

- Jonathan Lim, triple qualified English solicitor

I am impressed to see the coordination that the Administrative Body perseveres between the contributing authors and the review members in order to complete the two-step review procedure efficiently.”

*- Essama Chiba,
retired Egyptian author and journalist*

Nothing is impossible on earth by the active influence of youth. Good wishes goes for a bright future of TAY. The contribution of time and efforts by the Student Editorial Board is worthy of appreciation. The team was pivotal in selecting the best papers out of numerous submissions for this issue.”

*- Dr. Brundaban Panda,
Founder Principal of Khordha Law College and former Principal of Capital Law College*

I am amazed to see the number of contributions covering almost all areas of law. This definitely reflects the enthusiasm to excel in legal writing among these young authors.”

*- Abhishek Kamal,
Advocate at Supreme Court of India and Delhi High Court*
